

William Morris Gallery

William Morris was born in Walthamstow and from 1848 to 1856 lived in Water House, now the William Morris Gallery. The recent refurbishment programme provides visitors with a personal insight into one of the foremost creative and original talents of the 19th century, whose work has since inspired generations of artists, designers, writers and political thinkers.

The 18th Century, Grade II* listed building has been completely refurbished, revealing many of the original Georgian features for the first time. This transformation delivers an increased and fully refurbished exhibition space with three new galleries, a library, research and education centre and a new tearoom and balcony overlooking the gardens. Almost 600 objects, including some previously unseen works, will now be on display across the 12 galleries. The collection is the only one in the world to represent all aspects of Morris's work.
